“Mental Health First Aid at Work training has become a staple at Xylem. We first piloted these sessions in 2019 to raise mental health awareness and support throughout the company. This training has increasingly become more and more important during and post-pandemic. It has especially helped people leaders, human resources, and environmental health safety and security colleagues understand mental health illnesses on a deeper level and has given them the confidence and courage to handle any related situations that could potentially arise in the workplace. Unfortunately, these cases are on the rise, and it is important that leaders and colleagues across the company know how to address them with the utmost amount empathy and human care as possible. This training makes this possible.”
